TURKEY COST CLIMBS IN WHOLESALE FIELD

Lowest Mark In Many Years pat" on the tariff question. * Reached, But Upward Reaction Follows.

A difficult problem is presented the housewife by the present prices on butter. The product is actually scarce on the markets, and it costs the wholesale dealers 35 and 36 cents a pound today. The retailers are compelled to charge 38 and 40 cents a pound, while the extra fine grades, which cost even more wholesale, are bringing 45 cents per pound, making butter almost a luxury. Dealers say the price will go still higher, and that dry pastures last suffimer caused many Western farmers to rush their dairy stock to market. while recent storms have had an influerice on the price of the commodity. Turkeys retail at from 20 cents to 25 cents a pound, but the wholesale price. which has been lower during the last ten days than it has been in years, continues to rise, and probably will go still higher.

Quoting from "Blaine's Twenty Years In Congress," the Senator writes: "'Protection *** does not invite competition from abroad but is based on the contrary principle, that competition at home will always prevent monopoly on the part of capitalists, assure good wages to the laboring man and defend customers against the evils of extortion.

"But the trouble," says La Follette "has been that domestic competition did not prove the strong regulator of commerce that the early protectionists believed it would. Money interests began to form monopolies behind the tariff wall and both consumers and wage earners began to suffer from extortion. Tariff Differences.

"The difference in view of the tariff between the progressive Republicans and the so-called 'stand pat' republicans, lies exactly here. The progressives have seen this vast revolution in economic conditions and have recognized the need of radical changes in our tariff system while the stand pat Republicans, led by Aldrich, Penrose, Lodge, Smoot, and others, have refused to recognize the changed conditions. They believe in keeping the tariff wall as high as possible, notwithstanding the growth of extortionate monopolies. They believe it is more important to keep up the profits of the combined manufacturers than to keep down the prices of the people. The passage of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill of 1909 was the most outrageous assault of private sullenly. interests upon the people recorded in

Senator La Follette enters a plea for a scientific tariff commission to determine the proper tariff rates in future but says the present commission is useless for the purpose for which it was intended. # THE TIMES DAILY SERIAL STORY PIZARRO II By J. AUBREY TYSON

Synopsis of Chapters Already Published
Senor Roderigo Quexores calls on James Sparhawk, a civil engineer, with a proposition to build a railroad from Valo, in the Republic of Quincatan, in South America, to San Felicidad, the capital.
He starta, accompanied by William Handley, Tom Connerton, McCann, his office boy, and Sam Young. On the way down they have the company of Colonel Mosquera and his niece, Miss Webster, but the acquaintanceship is slight. Arrived at Valo they are welcomed by Jose Gomarra, secretary of the governor. They find Valo a terrorized community in which the governor is absolute. They make the acquaintance of a condemned man named Heredia, who had to give himself up to death next morning. He is in company of a horribly disfigured friend named Hemingway, an American.
Sparhawk determines to save Heredia, and sends a note to the governor advising him to postpone the execution until he has had an interview with him.
His answer is an invitation to the place of execution at daybreak. Later he is awakened by a noise in his room. It provew to be Miss Webster (or Miss Carlton), who has come to seek her friend, the former occupant of the house, not knowing about Sparhawk's tenancy. She is in need of protection from the governor, who has announced his intention of marrying her. Sparhawk proposes to her that, temporarily, and for purely business purposes, he shall marry her himself, the marriage to be annulled when the danger is over.

To this she finally consents, and they are married by Hemingway, who is a To this she finally consents, and they are married by Hemingway, who is a clergyman. Sparhawk and his friends then set out to save Heredia. They meet Don Antonio, the governor and at the CHAPTER XII (Continued). ON ANTONIO was now speaking in a tone of authority, and his voice was vibrant with righteous indignation. . Sparhawk smiled slightly at the governor's sudden change of front.

"I am glad to observe, your excellency, that you are so thoroughly in earnest in your desire to get me to work without further delay." Sparhawk re-plied, "This makes me confident that when I tell you that I want the Gerfalcon to take me to Moreno, which appar-anticy is the base of construction sup-plies. Your excellency will not refuse my request."

Don Antonio's newly recovered sedf-assurance suddenly took flight. This enigmatical American had him wonder-

"Believe me, I have not the slightest intention of leaving Quincatan. As chief engineer it is essential that I make an inspection of the line and get in touch with the men who are in charge of the various sections. For charge of the various sections. For the present I shall regard Moreno as my base."

"But the headquarters of the company are in Valo. It is here that the toard of construction holds its sessions."

"Moreno is between the Andes range and the cordillera, and it is from there that all mountain work is to be conducted. Over this work I want to exercise personal supervision."

ercise personal supervision."

The governor shrugged his shoulders.
"That is quite unnecessary, senor," he replied. "The purpose of the company in employing you was to have the bene-it of your counsel rather than your ervices in the field."

"My counsel would be valueless were not perfectly familiar with conditions n the field."

Don Antonio was gazing at Sparhawk thoughtfully when the door opened and McCann entered. The youth placed an envelope in Sparhawk's hands.

envelope in Sparhawk's hands.

'It isn't sealed, and Mrs. Sparhawk says you can read it," explained Mc-Cann, in his usual gloomy manner.

"Wait, Bob," said Sparhawk, as he drew from the envelope a letter addressed to Colonel Mosquero.

In this Barbara briefly informed her uncle that she was the wife of James Sparhawk, and requested him to send to her as speedlly as possible all her personal effects that she had brought with her to Quincatan. It was signed

To raise funds for the widows of Fire Captain Brown and Private Downs, who were killed in the fire of the Washington Aerie of Eagles, No. 125, will give a benefit ball Monday evening, December 11.

The committee in charge of the dance consists of Dr. L. A. Walker, chairwith her to Quincatan. It was signed Barbara Sparhawk.

The governor acained the letter hastily. "I fear, senor, that this visit I am making you will deplete your stock of ink and pens," he remarked, "but under Britt, James J. Waters, and Frank P. Barbara's signature he wrote:

Dear Mosquero—Having learned that your niece has become the wife of James Sparhawk or chief engineer. I beg of you to grant her request.

PORTILIA.

This he gave to Sparhawk, who after reading it turned to McCann. "Bob," he said, give this letter to Mayta and tell him to take it at once to Colonel Mosquero.

The boy went out and for several minutes no word was spoken by the occupants of the room. Don Antonio who had helped himself to a fresh cigar, was the first to break the silence. "You already understand, do you no senor, that the section between Vale and Moreno is to be completed before that between Moreno and San Felicidad?" he asked.

Jon Antonio's manner was becoming distinctly friendly now.

on Antonio's manner was becoming distinctly friendly now.
"I was so informed by Senor Quexores," Sparhawk replied. "What reasons have led you to this decision. I do not know, of course. It seems to re however, that a vast deal of time and expense might be saved by completing the San Felicidad section.
"We could then bring our materials from San Felicidad by rail to Moreno, instead of being obliged to transport them by the long water route from Allariz."

Don Antonio nodded with some degree Don Antonio nodded with some degree

Allariz."

Don Antonio nodded with some degree of complacency.

"What you say is perfectly true, senor," he replied. "There exists, however, a certain condition in the affairs of our republic which, from the point of view of the Calistar people, makes it plain that the Valo section must be completed first.

"The interests of the promoters of the Calistar railroad are centered in Valo, which has around it the richest mineral deposits in the world. Moreno, in the middle of the Iquiquil valley, is midway between Valo and San Felicidad. As a civil engineer you will see, of course, that the possession of Moreno is of the greatest strategical importance in the defense of Valo. Before opening up Moreno to San Felicidad, we must first open it up to Valo."

"In short, then, fearing that the territory east of Moreno will be invaded by enemies from San Felicidad, you want to establish railway communications between Valo and Moreno, and put Moreno in a strong position of defense."

Don Antonio smiled grimly and nod-

fense."

Don Antonio smiled grimly and nodded approvingly. "Senor Sparhawk, I fear I have underrated the ability of the man Quexores was sending down to me. I regret that my failure to grant you an interview last night prevented us from getting more thoroughly in touch with one another before."

Sparhawk bowed gravely, but, puffing his pipe vigorously, he did not reply. "Unfortunately General Munez, the president of our republic, is disposed to be somewhat rapaclous," Don Antonio went on. "His government granted us a right of way readily enough, but I have some reason to believe that when went on. "His government granted us a right of way readily enough, but I have some reason to believe that when the line is completed Munez will try to obtain possession of it. I presume our American bondholders would not insist on exposing us to any such possibility."

gleams of anger shone in his eyes. He quickly recovered himself, however, and it was in a caim, even voice that he replied:

"Naturally. The cost of protecting its property must be borne by the Calistar Company."

Sparhawk looked meditatively at the floor. "Well," he said, after a pause, "I hope your excellency will not object to my using the Gerfalcon for a trip to Moreno."

Moreno."
His excellency still hesitated, however. He slowly stroked his mustache and his brow was corrugated with deep and perplexing thought. Twice he started to speak, but each time he checked himself and coughed slightly instead. "The situation in Moreno is peculiar," he said at last.
"The fact of itself constitutes a potent reason for my visit," Sparhawk replied promptly.

The governor coughed again. "When do you purpose to start"
"Tonight."
"And how long will you stay in Moreno?"
"That will depend altogether upon circumstances, your excellency."
"If your stay should be protracted, how will you be able to keep in touch with our board?"
"The stringing of a wire for a dis-

"True," the governor assented, thoughtfuily. "It might be done."
There was a pause, then Don Antonio asked: "You will go alone?"
"No. As I had planned it, the party will consist of your excellency—"The governor fairly started from his chair. "I, zenor," he exclaimed, looking with narrowing eyes at the American.
"Yes, your excellency. There will also be Mrs. Sparhawk, Connerton, Young, and myself."

The governor settled back in his chair and again began stroking his mustache. "Connerton and Young?" he repeated, looking about him with puzzled eyes. "Senor Connerton is seated behind you, and—" Sparhawk began.

The governor, looking over his shoulder, encountered the calm gaze of the broad-shouldered man who still sat with his rifle across his knees.

"And Senor Young is the man who is in charge of our automobile."

"A most extraordinary vehicle," observed the governor thoughtfully.

"Very," Sparhawk assented, and very convenient, at times," the governor added.

"We have found it so," said Sparhawk, gravely.

Don Antonio sat absorbed in thought. At length, with considerable deliberation, he again turned to the table and picked up a pen. As he drew a sheet of paper toward him, he turned to Sparhawk.

"Senor," he said, "when my circumstances become such that I am compelled to seek employment as an aman-

"Senor," he said, "when my circumstances become such that I am compelled to seek employment as an amanuensis, I will refer my prospective employers to you for a recommendation."

Sparhawk bowed respectfully. "I shall be glad to assure them that I know of no one who can perform such service with a better grace," he said.

The governor then proceeded to write an order directing the captain of the with a better grace." he said.

The governor then proceeded to write an order directing the captain of the Gerfalcon to provision and coal his vessel and be prepared to sail for Moreno in the evening
